“New Glory?”

On March 20, Evelyn Orr treated 30 Mouth of the Platte members to the results of her extensive and intensive research into the “Flags of the Lewis and Clark Expedition.” Her efforts had sprung from a number of questions: “What US flag design(s) did Lewis and Clark carry? What was the military flag etiquette at that time? Did they fly the flag at every camp? Were there differences among the flags used in councils and on a daily basis?” Not confining herself to the Expedition journals, Evelyn dug into the US Flag’s earliest days. Information was retrieved from the National Archives, Library of Congress and Smithsonian publications to substantiate her findings. Revealing the “truth” regarding the flags of the Expedition may never be achieved due to the lack of standardized practices prior to the 20th Century.

Diverging from the cross-hatched British Union Jack, alternating red and white stripes were authorized by the June 14, 1777 resolution of the Continental Congress. Thirteen stars were specified in the blue field, but many early flags had the eagle from the national seal. The myth of Betsy Ross was revealed, as was Washington’s preference for six-pointed stars. “Colors” flown from boats often retained the triangular shape of nautical pennants, which reflect the utilitarian beginnings of flags as communication aids between ships.

The symbolism attached to the Flag of the United States stems largely from attitudes and events over the last 125 years. It was not regularly flown over the Capital until 1894; the first protection act was passed by South Dakota in 1897. Global conflicts in the 20th and 21st Centuries contribute to the reverence with which it is now displayed, both publicly and privately. Our current views may taint how we interpret the slim evidence in the Expedition journals regarding flags. An apparently casual attitude toward “official” flag design, display or use was in no way disrespectful for their time.

“It was so bad...”

submitted by Della Bauer

The Missouri River is back in its banks, which pleases us all, but we remain curious and want to know, “Just how bad was it?” Jolene Hulsing, interpreter with the US Army Corps of Engineers, presented a PowerPoint program that answered that question about the 2011 Missouri River flood at the April Mouth of the Platte dinner meeting. The opportunity to see and compare “before and after” pictures was a shocking eye-opener. Aerial photography of the flood also made stories and pictures from other media more alive and realistic. Now I understand why a lady on a flight into Omaha for the annual meeting said, “I thought the pilot was taking us into the ocean.”

It is hoped there won’t be a repeat performance by the river within our experience. Jolene’s program was enjoyed by everyone in attendance.

Trivia: In the Eye of the Beholder?

submitted by Della Bauer

May 15 was Trivia Night for Mouth of the Platte Chapter members at Anthony’s Steakhouse. There are numerous Lewis and Clark Expedition trivia books for sale in history and book stores, but the answers to a few of the questions are not always correct. Naturally, there are a few disagreements, especially in the area of interpreting the question(s) correctly.

Evidently our study group sessions are a great way of learning as Shirley Enos was the winner of the contest, followed by Neal Ratzlaff. Shirley has been in the chapter only two years, and is a great student of Lewis and Clark. Keep it up, Shirley!!

President's Note:

On the 24th of April I had total knee replacement surgery on my left knee. Surgery day came and went with a blur of activity in my room I was only partially aware of. Each of my remaining hospital days brought more strength and mobility and confidence. On the fourth day post surgery I was sent home. What my dear doctor didn't explain to me was that some people have an adverse side effect from anesthesia which causes emotional distress. Now add to this little surprise, my family history of depression. This all hit me hard when I returned home.

What popped in to my head, my first day at home, as I sat in my recliner, foot rest fully extended and my left knee packed in ice was, "What if it doesn't get any better than this?" A thought only someone wrapped in depression could have. Irrational thinking for sure but if you know anyone suffering from depression it doesn't have to make sense. At that very moment I thought of Meriwether Lewis and the unfortunate incident when he was shot by Cruzatte. I wondered what was going through his mind as he spent endless hours on his stomach in a boat, watching the Missouri swirl by, "What if it doesn't get any better than this?" Lying there he could clearly see that his adventurous assignment into the unknown, his "Darling Project," would soon be at a close. What should he do now? Yes, the journals needed to get published, so many little details to finish off and close the books. BUT the giant all consuming venture was done.

Did Lewis have anxiety attacks? Did he suffer sleepless nights? Cold sweats? Malaria most assuredly played a part in his suffering a well.

For me there are medications to get me through the rough spots and I am doing just fine. I know Captain Lewis suffered mentally for a long time. I only wish he had the medical help we enjoy today that helped pull me up out of the dark hole.

If he had lived as long as William Clark, what a different history we would have.

Off To A Good Start

submitted by Shirley Enos

The Lewis and Clark Country Family Days got off to a good start on Sunday, April 22. We were blessed with great weather for the day if a little windy. The crowd was small but being the first of these events it was difficult to gauge expectations. Many families who participated in this event plan to return for related activities scheduled through the summer.

Activities opened with a short film on the Expedition which ran several times during the afternoon. Matt "Sitting Bear" Jones spoke on "The Otoe and Missouri Nations Encountered by Lewis and Clark and the Loss of Their Culture." Jones gave an informative and thoughtful talk about his people and the circumstances which caused the loss of so much of their culture. The Otoe and Missouri nations consisted of many clans each responsible for the keeping of certain ceremonies, knowledge and history. Through the death of so many clan members and elders from disease, there were few people to carry on important ceremonies or to remember the history. After his presentation, Jones responded to many thought provoking questions from the audience. His passion for the subject was clear as the discussion well exceeded the 45 minutes scheduled.

Mouth of the Platte member Chet Worm, formerly with the Army Corps of Engineers, ran original TV footage of the 1952 Missouri River Flood hosted by Walter Cronkite. Chet displayed several empty gallon milk containers to demonstrate a cubic foot of water which is how water flow is measured.

This exhibit was popular and Chet answered many questions about the floods of 1952 and 2011.

Demonstrations of crafts from the early 1800s and hands-on activities were available throughout the afternoon. The Omaha Lace Society demonstrated the home industries of lace making and tatting. Several varieties of Native American Beading were on display, with opportunities for people to try their hand at each. Chapter member Evelyn Orr interpreted the 42 replica items in the Army Corps of Engineers Lewis and Clark Trunk which represents army life as it was for the Corps of Discovery. A range of crafts for “make and take” items were participated in by kids of all ages.

This was the first of five Mouth of the Platte sponsored events to be held on the fourth Sunday of each month, April through August, 1:00 to 5:00 p.m., at the Western Historic Trails Center, Council Bluffs, Iowa. These Family Days are geared toward people who know little about the Lewis and Clark and Corps of Discovery history. The goal is to educate in a fun way and increase the public's knowledge of the extraordinary historical figures that passed through our area and left so many stories for us to tell. We thank the Western Historic Trails Center, especially manager KC Hummel, for hosting the Mouth of the Platte Lewis and Clark Family Days. To learn more about how you can contribute to the remaining events, contact Shirley Enos at 402-291-4386, or email mouthoftheplatte@cox.net.

Battlefields of Nebraska

submitted by Ruth Hunolt

Tuesday, April 24, the study group headed to Rebecca's Indian Trading Post in Bellevue. Our speaker was Thomas Phillips, author of Battlefields of Nebraska. The book resulted from Phillips' extensive research, which was also apparent in his excellent presentation. We were amazed at the number of conflicts between the Indians and the settlers who claimed land here and other pioneers passing through on the way west. There were many small skirmishes with ranchers, the railroad, pony express and white travelers. The conflicts were compounded by the army fighting the Civil War in the East and not being available to protect either the settlers or Indians. Study group coordinator, Ava Hastert, related that an incident between her ancestors and the Indians was included in the book.

Thanks go to Mary Langhorst for arranging this study group outing which included lunch at the Belle Vue Café.

Phillips, a Nebraska native, rose to the rank of colonel during 36 years in the military. He now resides in Lincoln with his wife and writes books on the military, American history and baseball. The paperback Battlefields of Nebraska book was published by Caxton Press and is distributed by the University of Nebraska Press (www.nebreskappress.unl.edu).

Study Group Rocks the Boat

submitted by Della Bauer

For the past several months, members of the Tuesday Study Group have focused on "Preparing for the Expedition," a topic that has not been exhausted even after 11 years of study. The subjects I decided to discuss were the boats needed to set out—keelboat, pirogues, and the iron boat. Canoes and bullboats would later be a part of the journey across the continent.

After many hours of preparation, I presenting the topic to the class and opened the discussion. Several questions were discussed, but one continues to be debated. Was the iron boat put in the water at Harpers Ferry? More reading is needed to determine the likely answer. Without sufficient thought, I asked who paid for the keelboat. Evidently I could not see the "forest for the trees" and did not consider that the Corps of Discovery was a military mission, and of course, the government/tax payers paid for the boat!
